14 dead but damage minimal, say disaster officials

By Norman Bordadora and Inquirer Northern and Central Luzon

AFTER PACKING WINDS of nearly 200 kilometers per hour, Supertyphoon "Paeng" (international code name: Cimaron) considerably weakened yesterday as it crossed two mountain ranges in northern Luzon. But it left at least 14 people dead and a trail of destruction.

Before roaring out to the South China Sea, Paeng blew away houses, uprooted trees, toppled electric posts and caused landslides and flooding.

But disaster officials marveled at initial reports pointing out the "minimal" damage caused by Paeng compared to the destruction wrought last month by Typhoon "Milenyo" that left 221 dead or missing and tens of thousands homeless.

"The casualty and damage report is minimal," Defense Secretary Avelino Cruz Jr. reported to President Macapagal-Arroyo, who is in China, in a teleconference from the headquarters of the National Disaster Coordinating Council in Camp Aguinaldo yesterday.

Nathaniel Cruz, weather branch chief of the Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa), said Paeng was quite strong.

Cabinet men in row over Cha-cha loss agree to truce

By Juliet Labog-Javellana

CABINET MEMBERS FEUDING over the defeat of the people's initiative have agreed not to launder their dirty linen in public—at least while President Macapagal-Arroyo is away and while the country is struggling to assist victims of Supertyphoon "Paeng."

"We cannot afford people thinking we are fighting when there is a disaster going on," the President's chief of staff, Michael Defensor, said.

To prevent the squabble from getting nastier, Defensor said that he, Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita and Defense Secretary Avelino Cruz Jr.—who is at the center of the squabble—phoned each other on Sunday and agreed that all parties involved should shut up.

Defensor confirmed that all was not well in the Cabinet following the Supreme Court decision throwing out the administration-backed petition for approval of a signature collection campaign to change the Constitution.

"All this finger-pointing has to stop and nobody has to resign. If that has to be resolved, it must be resolved within the Cabinet, especially if there are really deep wounds," he said in a phone interview.

"I'm sure that as grown-ups, we can resolve it among ourselves but it's best to wait for the President," he said.

Ms Arroyo is expected to return from her China trip on Friday.

Defensor confirmed the rift between Cruz and Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez after the former reported that the defeat of the people's initiative revealed a falling-out between Malacañang and the so-called "The Firm"—the influential law office Villaraza & Angangco founded by Cruz and Supreme Court Associate Justice Antonio Carpio.

It was Carpio who penned the

GMA seeks Malaysia help in talks with MILF

By Christine O. Avendaño

NANNING, CHINA (VIA PLDT/Smart)—President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday told Malaysian Prime Minister Abdullah Ahmad Badawi that the Philippines government was willing to grant a Moro rebel demand on ancestral lands if it conformed to the Constitution in a bid to revive deadlocked peace talks.

Ms Arroyo met with Badawi on the sidelines of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations-China summit here to seek Malaysia's assistance in restarting talks with the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) which collapsed in September.

She later got Badawi's pledge to help the Philippine government move forward in its peace initiative, Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye told reporters.

Talks between the government and the MILF bogged down over the MILF's demand to include close to 1,000 barangays as part of the Bangsamoro entity without a referendum. Government negotiators rejected the demand, saying it was against the Constitution.

"The President mentioned that we are willing to grant this but this should be done in the framework of the Constitution," Bunye told reporters. "The President hoped this would be properly conveyed to the other side."

Asked if Ms Arroyo asked Badawi to speak to the MILF, Bun-

Japan says it won't allow toxic waste export to RP

By Nikko Dizon

THE JAPANESE EMBASSY YESTERDAY sought to clarify "some misunderstanding" that the Japan-Philippines Economic Partnership Agreement (JPEPA) would allow the entry of toxic and hazardous waste into the Philippines.

Environmental groups last week slammed the accord which President Macapagal-Arroyo and then Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi signed on Sept. 9 in Helsinki on the sidelines of the Asia-Europe Meeting.

Calls were also made in the Senate, the Philippines' treaty-ratifying body, for hearings on the agreement, following criticism by environmentalists that in exchange for Filipino nurses and caregivers, the country would become Japan's dump.

Malacañang has directed a review of the agreement.

"Judging from the media reports, there seems to be some misunderstanding in the Philippines that toxic and hazardous wastes will be exported from Japan to the Philippines as customs duties of waste materials will be eliminated after the JPEPA comes into effect," the embassy said in a statement.

"The government of Japan has an established legal framework based on the Basel Convention and has been enforcing strict export/import control, which does not allow any export of toxic and hazardous wastes to another country, including the Philippines, unless the government of such a country approves such export.

"Japan remains strongly committed to the strict enforcement of such export/import control, which will prevent

Water, water

THE COMING OF THE SUPERTYPHOONS "MILENYO" and "Paeng," which cut a swath of death and destruction across Luzon in the past four weeks, makes one think of a line from Coleridge's "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner": "Water, water everywhere, but not a drop to drink." Typhoons bring a lot of rainwater but the country does not seem to benefit from them. Probably the situation in the future will not be so bad as that described in Coleridge's poem, but it will be close to it: water will become such a scarce commodity that rationing may have to be resorted to.

Editorial

In fact, water rationing has already started. The Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage System has said it is reducing the water supply for households and businesses in Metro Manila starting tomorrow. The reduction was announced by the MWSS as the water level in Angat Dam, which supplies more than 70 percent of the water in Metro Manila and irrigation for Central Luzon, dropped to its lowest level due to El Niño.

Ostensibly, the country has a lot of water supply: it has a total water reserve of 228 billion cubic meters per year against a total water demand of 30 billion cubic meters per year. But demand is expected to increase to 85 billion cubic meters by 2025. Right now, the distribution of water is uneven, with many areas suffering from shortages.

The water shortage could affect food production because agriculture is heavily dependent on water. The International Water Management Institute in 1998 said that water would be the single most important constraint to increased food production. And indeed, the lack of irrigation facilities and water in many areas of the country is preventing it from producing more rice, for one thing.

It is a paradox that the Philippines, which is surrounded by water, which has many lakes, rivers and brooks and which gets a lot of rainfall every year, should have a water problem. Former Environment Secretary Elisea Gozun said several years ago that on a macro level, it appeared that the country had plenty of water but some areas were suffering from lack of water.

Environment writer Henrylito D. Tacio reported last year that in 1991, the Japan International Cooperation Agency listed nine major cities as "water-critical areas": Metro Manila, Cebu, Davao, Baguio, Angeles, Bacolod, Iloilo, Cagayan de Oro and Zamboanga. Recently the Philippine Human Development Report confirmed the JICA study.

Dr. Rafael D. Guerrero III, executive director of the Philippine Council for Aquatic and Marine Research and Development, said that despite an average annual rainfall of 2.36 meters, the distribution of rain is not even throughout the country. Southern Tagalog has the most freshwater available, while Western Visayas has the least.

Much of the country's water resource is threatened by misuse, pollution and weather aberrations such as El Niño. And with the constant increase in population, there will be a greater demand for water.

What has to be done to meet the water shortage in certain areas of the country? First, rationing will have to be enforced, as it is already being enforced in Metro Manila.

Second, a water conservation campaign has to be waged. For instance, laundry and bath water can be saved and used to clean sidewalks and flush toilets. "Take a bath with a friend" has sometimes been said in jest, but some day it may become a necessary conservation measure.

Third, much of the rainwater brought by typhoons and the monsoons goes to waste. If more dams and impoundment facilities could be constructed, a lot of water could be saved and stored for use during the dry months.

Fourth, water wastage and misuse will have to be penalized either with fines or taxes. For instance, there is no reason why the rich should use tens of cubic meters of water just to wash a car or two when the poor cannot have access to even two or three cubic meters for their daily needs.

Fifth, a national program has to be drawn up on the proper use and conservation of water, the tapping of new water sources and the prevention of the pollution of water sources such as lakes and rivers that can be tapped for household water.

Water, next to air, is most essential to human life. The government and the private sector will have to get together and act now before the water problem gets out of hand and reaches crisis proportions.
